

Contact: Chris Rickerd, American Civil Liberties Union, (202) 675-2339,

What if every immigrant apprehended in the Tucson sector were prosecuted through Streamline?

- It would be very expensive. Tucson currently prosecutes about 1 out of every 10 border apprehensions through Streamline; if every migrant apprehended in Tucson in 2011 had received the average Streamline sentence of 30 days,<sup>10</sup> the costs of incarceration alone would have been an additional $301 million.<sup>11</sup> That doesn't include court costs – judges, prosecutors, defense attorneys, and even new buildings – to handle more than 100,000 additional immigration cases.
- The federal prison system is already at 139% of operational capacity, so any added immigration prisoners would need to be housed in new facilities, which would likely be privately operated. The federal government currently is obligated to private companies f4(n)-(pr)73-44(co)fTt(m)-3(di)-4(n(n)-(pr)73m1-4(

